

PINKERTON INQUIRY.

Rend, the Coal Man, Wouldn't Employ Pinkerton Detectives.

THE SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION

Has an Interesting Session at Chicago Saturday—More Particulars of the Departure of the Force for Homestead—They Should Have Been Sworn in in Pennsylvania.

CHICAGO, Nov. 20.—Senators Peffer and Gallinger, of the senatorial committee, continued the investigations of private detective agencies yesterday. Colonel W. P. Rend the coal dealer and mine owner, told the senators that they had a Titanic mission to discharge. He did not believe that the troubles between capital and labor could be easily patched up.

Senator Gallinger asked Colonel Rend what he thought of the laws looking toward arbitration. He replied that they tended toward communism and anarchy. Conciliation was the first thing, in his opinion, to be tried; if that failed, then resort to voluntary arbitration, and he believed that there had been a great deal of pernicious legislation toward that end.

Colonel Rend was asked his opinion as to the question of employing detectives to go among labor organizations and keep the leaders under constant espionage. He said he had never employed detectives for such purpose, and that he regarded the practice with extreme ill favor.

PINKERTON FOUND TOO EXPENSIVE. Roswell M. Miller, president of the Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, testified that during the Burlington strike a strike of Milwaukee men took place. He employed Pinkerton men for a short time, but discharged them as futile and expensive.

T. J. Morgan, the labor leader, said he had experienced but one day of strike life. He knew nothing of the employment of detectives. He said the English language was inadequate to express the hatred which workmen felt for detectives. He coincided with Colonel Rend as to the utility of legal arbitration under existing conditions.

At the afternoon session Richard Powers said he was a vessel dispatcher and had experience with the famous strike of '77. The aid of the state militia was called in, and at that time the name of the state militia was as obnoxious to the men as the name of Pinkerton to-day.

WORKINGMEN'S OBJECTIONS TO DETECTIVES. Powers reviewed the great strike at the stock yards in '79. Twenty thousand people were out of employment. The Pinkerton men were brought and 200 of them paraded the yards. The result was that the strike was prolonged. But for the presence of the Pinkertons the dispute would have been settled in a very short time by arbitration.

"What is the objection to the Pinkertons on the part of the workers?" Powers was asked.

"First," answered the witness, "95 per cent of them are aliens; second, they are of the criminal class; third, they are men who cannot be believed under oath."

The witness admitted that he spoke without personal knowledge, but he believed his statement was accurate. He was in favor of arbitration by the law or by voluntary effort. He expressed the opinion that there was not a labor organization in the country in which Pinkerton men are not employed as spies. Their presence was detrimental to the welfare of both worker and employer.

HOW THE MEN LEFT CHICAGO.

Superintendent F. Murray, of the Pinkerton Agency, was recalled. He supplied the committee with a list of the men sent to Homestead. The number was 134. They left on the night of July 4. The fact of their going by night was merely a matter of convenience. They did enter the rear car, and these cars were guarded by armed officers. They had been engaged two or three days before the date of departure. He told the men that there was little if any danger.

"Inasmuch as your men had arms sent ahead of them, on what hypothesis did you think there would be no danger?"

"Our instructions were that there would be no danger."

Asked as to the men being sworn in as deputies, he said it was the intention to have them sworn in, but he supposed the swearing in would not take place until they reached the works.

The witness again reiterated the statement that all men were chosen with great care and regard to character. Charles Wapensteen, against whom an accusation was made by a witness, had never been convicted of crime, and was never under the shadow of crime. Several names, including John F. Dingall, David Lynch, Stephen Collins and R. F. Ward were mentioned, and the witness questioned as to their character. He denied that he knew anything against any of them.

FOES OF THE BEETLES.

A Way Found to Protect West Virginia's Spruce Forests.

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY, MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Nov. 19.—During the past two years the owners of extensive pine timber tracts in West Virginia and Virginia have noticed that there existed an unhealthy condition of the trees in certain sections, and the rapid spread of this infection from the less valuable to the more valuable species of pine gave rise to grave alarm. As the trouble was first noticed in the northern part of the great pine belt, that extends from the northern boundary of Pennsylvania through to the southern part of the United States, the matter was referred to the West Virginia Agricultural station for investigation.

Prof. A. D. Hopkins, entomologist of the station, made several tours of investigation through the infected districts, and discovered that the trouble was not due to a diseased condition of timber, but that it was caused by the ravage of a beetle, the Dendroctonus frontalis, to which he gave the common name of "The Destructive Pine Bark Beetle."

HOW THE TREES ARE AFFECTED.

The first trees attacked in the spring will die during the fall, but most of the others will remain green until the following spring, when the leaves will be noticed turning yellow near the top, and in a short time the entire tree will show the killing effects. Prof. Hopkins found that while the "scrub" pine yielded quick to attack, the more valuable of the timber pines appeared to be able to longer resist the attack; but it was manifest that after the beetles had gained sufficient strength of numbers in scrub pine they could easily attack and destroy the other species.

From these facts it was decided that if, through natural appearance or artificial introduction, some disease or insect could be obtained that would prey upon the destructive beetle, and thus keep its numbers reduced, the destruction might be checked. It appears to be necessary that the beetles kill the trees in which they breed, and if at any time there would not be enough of them to kill the trees their power for reproduction would be gone and they would gradually die out.

AN INSECT THAT KNOCKS THEM OUT.

By correspondence with entomologists and forest officials in Germany, Prof. Hopkins learned that a certain insect in Europe was very destructive to insects similar in appearance and habits to our destructive pine bark beetle. The experiment of introducing this beneficial species into this country to check the trouble in question was recommended to the station officials and to the owners of forests. The proposition met with favor, and in order to hasten the experiment the station, assisted by the timber owners, sent Prof. Hopkins to Germany to make personal investigations.

His visit to Germany was at the time of the cholera epidemic, and on account of the strict quarantine he decided that it would not be possible to get sufficient numbers of the insect into this country to introduce into our forests this fall. Arrangements were accordingly made for extensive collections to be made and sent to this country during this winter and next spring. Prof. Hopkins returned recently with 1,000 specimens. Since his return he has been conducting a series of experiments, and finds that when they were placed with our destructive beetle they attack them vigorously.

ROWLESBURG DEMOCRATS

A Attempt to Celebrate Cleveland's Victory—The Postoffice.

Special Correspondence of the Intelligence.

ROWLESBURG, W. Va., Nov. 19.—The Democrats of this place made great preparations to celebrate their return to power. The widely advertised affair came off last night. While the Democrats are few in number here they expected heavy reinforcements from Grafton, Piedmont and intermediate points along the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, but they were doomed to disappointment. When the train came in from Grafton it brought only the Grafton band, which had been engaged for the occasion, and some transparencies, which had been borrowed from Grafton, along with Blansy's pictures of the two successful candidates and the picture of Mrs. Cleveland. The promised aid from Piedmont failed to appear, so it looked as if it would be a slim affair, which it was. By actual count, there was just thirty-eight in the procession besides the band. The whole thing was a great failure.

The scramble for the postoffice here has commenced, and from present indications it will be pretty lively. Mr. P. A. Coniff, who had the postoffice under Cleveland's former administration, and J. Frank Manown are the contestants. Mr. Coniff is a very popular young man and made a good postmaster, but it is understood that A. D. Bowman is going to be associated with him in business and here is where the trouble comes in. Some Democrats are very much opposed to Mr. Bowman having anything to do with the postoffice.

DIED OF STARVATION.

A Once Prosperous Man Dies for Want of Food in Allegheny.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 20.—Under the shadow of the Allegheny City home John Wells was yesterday found dead. Starvation killed him, and in his death struggles he had burrowed deep into the mud of the townshin road.

William Wells was once the ideal happy village blacksmith. At Vernon for years he had worked at the forge, surrounded by his wife and children. Misfortune several years ago came to him in many different ways and he lost his reason. One day while forging out a horseshoe a piece of iron struck him in the eye, putting it out. The pain of the wound, coupled with some financial losses, drove him mad. The little home was broken up, Wells was sent to the asylum, and the wife and children disappeared. They have never been heard of since.

Two years ago Wells was released from the insane asylum. Since then he has wandered about the country begging alone. His mind was not sound and he was frequently flighty. For a while past he has been around Sharpsburg considerably, spending the most of his time at the mills watching the men at their work. Several days ago he disappeared from his usual haunts and the men missed him much. Inquiry was made about town, but no one had seen Wells.

Yesterday morning Charles Brennen, a farm hand employed by Mr. Cook, who lives on the Ross estate, while on his way to work, stumbled over the body of a dead man on the road just outside of the Allegheny City Home. It was that of Wells, and there was every evidence that there had been an awful death struggle. The man's clothing was covered with yellow mud, his hands were tightly clenched across his breast and his face told of inexpressible agony. The ground where he lay was torn and rooted as though a hog had made the place its feeding ground. There were no marks on the body to indicate foul play and everybody was for a time at a loss to know what caused death. The body was removed to an undertaker's in Sharpsburg and Coroner McDowell notified. The more the coroner worked on the case the more mysterious it grew. Last night the inquest was held and Dr. McIntosh, of Sharpsburg, made a post mortem examination. It revealed a stomach full.

Wells's stomach showed that not a particle of food had entered it for several days, and that death was caused by starvation. Charles Brennen at the hearing remembered of having seen Wells on Thursday evening at Ross station. He was walking slowly up and down the depot platform with his head bowed low. A lady had seen him Friday night going across the fields toward the poor farm. He was moving very slowly and his features were worn and haggard. It is probable that Wells was on his way to the poor farm, when what little strength he had left him, and death came in this horrible form.

When Wells was a blacksmith at Verona he was a fine specimen of man. He was nearly six feet tall and was built accordingly. Yesterday when his body was found it was but a shadow of the former John Wells. He was actually emaciated; in fact, his strong man of yore was nothing but skin and bones. Coroner McDowell has not been able so far to find a friend of the dead man. At Verona there are many who knew him in his happier days, but not one who will take charge of his remains. The body will be held for several days with the hope that either Mrs. Wells or some of his children will turn up and give the man a decent burial.
